Wednesday, April 10. 1706.

London, April 10.

THOSE who observe the Course of the Publick News, know that several general and confus'd but no orderly and particular Account had been given here of the remarkable Battle fought the 13th of February in great Poland, that yesterday that General Schuylenburgh's Letter was publish'd in the Postman. As that Letter is the most distinct and intelligible Relation of that Battle on the Part of the Saxons; so we present the Publick with a no less regular Account of it, written on the Part of the Swedes, and dated from Lissa February 11, which was transmitted by the last Mail from Holland.

General Reinschild being advanc'd with his Army beyond Frawstad in his March to meet the Saxons as was suppos'd, suddenly turn'd back the 11th of February, encamp'd in the Neighbourhood of Lissa, and gave out he would retire to Posen. He foresaw that the Saxons would attribute his Retreat to Fear, the rather because they knew the Swedes were much inferior to them in Number. For General Reinschild had but 5 Regiments of Foot, 3 of Horse, and 5 of Dragoons, making together 10000 Men; and the Saxons were double that Number. What contributed to confirm General Schuylenburgh in the Opinion that the Retreat of the Swedes was no Feint, was his Knowledge that General Reinschild might have engag'd with Advantage 2 Days before, having then a fair Opportunity to cut off the Muscovites from the Saxons. But General Reinschild has since declar'd, that he counted it a trivial Business to ruine only some Regiment of Muscovites, and propos'd to himself to strike a Blow much more important and glorious to his Master's Arms. He therefore feign'd a Retreat, which embolden'd the Saxons to quit the Frontier of Silesia, where they were cover'd by Woods and Morasses, and advance to the very Ground he wish'd to fight on. This Project of his to fight in an open Country an Enemy so much superior to him, is a sign he plac'd an extraordinary Confidence in the Goodness of his Troops. Several Bodies of the Saxons approach'd Frawstad the 12th; whereupon, to lure them further on still, he sent Order to some Troops he had left near that Town, to retreat in great seeming Hurry; but the very same Hour he put himself on the march with the main of his Forces, met those Troops at a Village call'd Swetske, and disposing his whole Army in Order of Battle, advanc'd the 13th in the Morning directly towards the Enemy, who had Intelligence of his Approach time enough to post themselves very advantageously, having on their Right the Village of Geyersdorf, on their Left that of Rohrsdorf, and Frawstad in their Rear. The 2 Wings were extended to the said Villages, behind which General Schuylenburgh design'd to send some Troops to hem in the Swedes, and hinder them from retreating again. The Front of the Saxons was defended by their Artillery and Chevaux de Frise: The Swedes advanc'd leisurely, the Artillery firing continually upon them from the Time they came within Reach of it; but it being pointed too high, the Shot flew over them: They held on their Way with great Firmness, and sustain'd 2 Volleys of the Saxons small Shot, while they clear'd the Ground of the Chevaux de Frise; which done, they had no sooner given their first Fire than Part of the Saxons took to their Heels. The Swedish Cavalry charg'd and broke the Horse of the Enemy's right Wing; whose Left was also soon put to the Rout. Then a terrible Slaughter ensued. The Foot seeing themselves abandon'd by the Horse, cast themselves into a square Body and stood some Discharges; but the Swedes surrounding them, they were cut in Pieces or taken Prisoners, very few escaping. Never was such a Spectacle: Whole Regiments flung down their Arms, fell on their Knees, and begg'd Mercy and Quarter. The Muscovites could obtain none, but were put to the Sword. The Saxons had better Usage, and 8013 of them were made Prisoners, among them Lieutenant General Wastromirski, Major General Lutzelbourg; the Count de Joyeuse, Messieurs Drost, Lack, and Bosc, Colonels; 160 other Commission Officers, and Subalterns in Proportion. They are all treated very honourably. I counted yesterday on the Field of Battle 7000 dead Bodies, The Road for a League together is strew'd with the Slain. Of the Swedes no more than 373 were kill'd, among them Collonel Liliehock formerly Governour of Posenania, Lieutenant Collonel Cronhielm, and some Captains of Horse and Foot. Major Orsted is missing. The Lieutenant Collonels Buckwald, Parkul, and Creutz; the Majors Wrangel, and Snlossey; and Captain Lod, are dangerously wounded. The first receiv'd nine Shots, and 4 Cuts or Thrusts. The Number of our wounded is 506; the Commissary General shew'd me the List. In a Word, 'tis a miraculous Victory which God has given us. 'Tis very unaccountable the Saxons that were at least double our Number, should be so totally defeated with so little Loss on our Side, and in so little a Time, for 'twas an Action of less than 3 Hours. It began at Noon, and the hottest of it was over by 1 a Clock. All the Saxon Artillery, in Number 32 brass Cannon, 11094 Musquets, 11008 Swords, and 106 Colours and Standards, were taken. The Baggage of the Saxons was behind them at the Distance of 2 Leagues from the Field of Battle; so that not a Swede was diverted by plundering, but all were bent wholly upon Slaughter. The

The Saxons had rais'd a considerable Sum of the Inhabitants of Frawstad for Contributions; and had threaten'd to plunder and burn this Town of Lissa, and other Places of King Stanislaus's Patri-mony.

Never Acted but twice.
